

EX NOVO Journal of Archaeology

Call for Applications

Journal Editor and Web-Manager Positions

Ex Novo is a fully open access, peer reviewed, scientific journal mainly focusing on issues related to social archaeology. Issues are published yearly by the Ex Novo Association in collaboration with Archaeopress Publishers of Academic Archaeology. Established in 2016, Ex Novo has already three issues to its credit (Vol. 1 - 2016; Vol. 2 – 2017; Vol 3 – 2018) and a complete publishing plan until 2020. More information about the concept of the journal, its editors, scientific board and the volumes published so far, please go to the Ex Novo website or to the webpages of our publisher Archaeopress.

Considering the increasing visibility and distribution of the journal, we are now seeking nominations and applications for one/two new editor positions with the following responsibilities:

- 1- Actively cooperating to the editorial work (selection of topics, contents and manuscripts; co-ordination of the peer review process; editing and formatting of the journal issues)
- 2- Managing and implementing the website, including our blog and social media channels (Facebook and Twitter)

Perspective candidates should satisfy the following requisites:

- Appropriate scientific background or a strong motivation to implement it. A PhD in archaeology or similar fields (completed or on going) is fundamental to stand as a candidate, although exceptions will be made in case of long experience in the editorial, academic and/or archaeological sector.
- Previous experience or strong motivation for acquiring a solid knowledge about the editorial work necessary to publish a scientific journal. Tasks to undertake include: selecting and evaluating of the manuscripts submitted to the journal; searching and contacting the peer-reviewers; editing; formatting; researching and formulating the themes addressed in the coming issues, scientific networking, etc.

EX NOVO

- Previous experience in designing, implementing and managing websites, blogs and social media; ability to modulate the communication according to different audiences, whether they be specialists or non-specialists.

- Interest in deepening and broadening the knowledge of issues related to social archaeology; strong motivation for joining the many activities in which the journal is involved; for suggesting new themes that may enlarge the research interests of Ex Novo and lead to innovative approaches and reflections within our discipline.

- Interest in actively participating to the current debate about the role of archaeology in Italy and more widely in the world.

- Fluent English; knowledge of Italian or any other language is an important asset.

Ex Novo will provide the perspective candidates with:

- The opportunity to join the editorial board of an international scientific journal aiming to increase its impact factor in the coming years.

- The possibility to work in a team of internationally acknowledged specialists with the support of a prominent advisory board

- To play an active role in shaping the scientific content of Ex Novo

- To build a solid, international, scientific network

To submit your application, please forward your abridged CV (max 2 pages) and a motivation letter (max 2 pages) to submission@archaeologiaexnovo.org

N.B. The editors of Ex Novo do not earn any wage nor are entitled to any refund. The involvement with the project is purely scientific and motivated by a genuine interest for the social implications of doing archaeology in the present day.

EX NOVO